

The long-awaited all-night event returns after three years!

Roppongi Art Night 2026 Program Announcement

Dates: Saturday, October 31 – Sunday, November 1, 2026

RAN Focus spotlights France!

A diverse program—featuring works by Yoann Bourgeois Art Company and Charles Pétillon—brings color to the streets of Roppongi.

The Roppongi Art Night Executive Committee is pleased to announce Roppongi Art Night 2026—an art festival set against the backdrop of Roppongi—as an all-night event from 17:00 on Saturday, October 31, through 6:00 on Sunday, November 1, 2026. This year marks the long-awaited return of the all-night format—allowing visitors to enjoy art from sunset to sunrise—for the first time in three years. Approximately 60 programs will be presented across the entire Roppongi area, in art museums, cultural institutions, large-scale complexes, and shopping streets.

Get ready for another sleepless night, stretching from sunset on Saturday until dawn on Sunday!

The highlight of this year's Roppongi Art Night is RAN Focus, Organized in partnership with the Embassy of France in Japan / Institut français du Japon, it will feature a selection of France's finest performing arts curated by CENTQUATRE-PARIS. The globally acclaimed company led by Yoann Bourgeois will present two fantastical, gravity-defying works that skillfully utilize trampolines and rotating stage apparatuses. Sculptor and set designer Yvan Clédat and Coco Petitpierre will bring to life the bathing scenes frequently found in modern paintings through a performance brimming with humor and vitality. Also not to be missed are the installations by Charles Pétillon—known for site-specific works using countless balloons—and Olivier Grossetête, who collaborates with local residents to construct massive architectural structures out of cardboard. A wide array of other programs featuring both Japanese and international artists awaits you. These works go beyond mere static displays; they transform the visitors' own actions—engaging the senses and moving the body—into an integral part of the artistic experience. Come and immerse yourself in an extraordinary, intense experience set against the backdrop of Roppongi, lasting all the way until morning.

WA

Wa The Circle is a visual meditation on the duality of existence—transience and eternity, stillness and motion, the individual and the whole. Composed of two floating circles made from white balloons, each six meters in diameter, the installation evokes the concepts of Wa (harmony) and Wa (the circle), symbolizing unity and the cyclical nature of time. The upper circle embodies eternity, the unseen, and the breath of life. These balloons suggest lightness and the enigmatic nature of memory, transcending time itself. The lower circle symbolizes transience, the tangible, and the human world with its materiality. The balloons evoke the fleeting beauty of existence—fragile and ever-changing. The space extending between the two circles is a sacred void, a place that invites quiet contemplation. This Ma (in between)—a concept cherished in Japanese aesthetics—is an interval where all possibilities emerge; it is a moment of stillness bursting with meaning.

Charles Pétillon

Born in 1973, Charles Pétillon is a contemporary artist known for his photographic works and large-scale, site-specific installations. He is frequently commissioned to create works for public spaces and regularly holds exhibitions in galleries and museums.

Olivier Grossetête

Collaborative Monumental Cardboard Construction

A grand, non-traditional art project that fuses architectural elements with a participatory approach. People of all ages and backgrounds—from children and adults to seniors—can take part. The materials used are limited to cardboard boxes and adhesive tape. Inspired by Japanese architecture, the structures are erected entirely by the participants working together, without cranes or other heavy machinery. The finished work stands over 10 meters tall!!

Olivier Grossetête

Born in Paris in 1973, Grossetête creates works that infuse everyday life with poetry and dreams while questioning social and physical laws. His work ranges from collages incorporating administrative documents and the creation of poetic objects to large-scale architectural projects using cardboard. Having collaborated with local communities to build over 300 structures across five continents, he explores the symbolism of architecture, human connections, our relationship with the world, and the way we live and act together.

Yoann Bourgeois Art Company

Artistic Director and Choreographer: Yoann Bourgeois

Performer: Anna Berger

Approach 17. Opening

Inspired by the kinetic nature of Philip Glass's composition Opening, this piece employs a staircase that leads nowhere; through a repetitive cycle of ascending and descending, it simply yet powerfully portrays the trajectory of human existence. Here, the chronological order of time is disrupted through a playful exploration of reversibility—a theme akin to playing something in reverse. Across an invisible divide, a figure slips through the void, skillfully manipulating the laws of gravity and weightlessness in an attempt to reach a "state of freedom" poised between equilibrium and imbalance. At the heart of this visual poem lies a progression—stirring and vertigo-inducing—toward a point of suspension. It captures that precise, fleeting moment when the body has climbed to its absolute peak, yet the inevitable fall has not yet begun.

Approach 19. Passage

Passage : Approach 19 is a work that explores the multifaceted interpretations associated with the symbol of the door. To truly evoke the diverse images and associations linked to this symbol, Yoann Bourgeois devised a piece structured around a network of interconnected gestures. These movements are linked to a mechanism that amplifies the pivoting motion of a door opening—a mechanism itself mounted upon a rotating platform. The hypnotic spiral generated by this dual circular motion enables a state of endless, infinite movement: a perpetual cycle of opening and closing.

Yoann Bourgeois Art Company

Artistic Director and Choreographer: Yoann Bourgeois

Performers: Anna Berger, Yvonne Smink

Yoann Bourgeois continually challenges the boundaries between different artistic approaches. His unique method manifests as a physical passage that highlights singular phenomena, propelling him toward a vast array of spatial concepts and an infinite range of movement variations. His body of work is the culmination of a lifelong, ceaseless creative process—one he describes as the pursuit of an inaccessible suspension point. After collaborating with numerous renowned choreographers, Bourgeois founded his own company in 2010. From 2016 to 2022, he served as Artistic Director of the National Choreographic Center of Grenoble (CCN2), becoming the first circus artist to head one of France's nineteen National Choreographic Centers (CCN). Bourgeois pursues a thoroughly multidisciplinary—fusing diverse genres—and innovative form of physical expression, engaging in performances, collaborations, and workshops around the world. His work is rooted in site-specific creation unique to each location, harnessing the energy and inherent characteristics of the surrounding environment.

Clédat & Petitpierre

The Bathers / Les Baigneurs

From Picasso to Léger, the motif of bathers has long been a recurring theme in modern painting. This performance offers a lively and humorous reinterpretation of that subject. It features a pair of large figures—clad in striped swimsuits made entirely of pleated tulle—inhabiting an imaginary seaside world. The duo strikes various poses typical of beachgoers: sunbathing, lounging, and playing. Moving leisurely alongside two large blue towels and a yellow tulle ball, they seem to evoke the sea and the sun through a playful and poetic visual language.

Clédat & Petitpierre

Working together since the 1986, partners in both their personal lives and artistic practice, they work as sculptors, performers, and choreographers, creating a unique body of work centered on the human body in a state of constant transformation and motion. Their performances fuse dance with visual art, conjuring dreamlike, poetic worlds in which the performers undergo striking transformations. As both sculptors and performance artists, they blur the boundaries between exhibitions, galleries, museums, public spaces, and theaters. They pioneered the concept of activated sculpture, in which they themselves inhabit the works and breathe life into them through subtle performance.

Leïla Ka

Bluff

Maldonne, Leïla Ka's first ensemble piece, has been touring globally for three years—including sold-out performances at the Olympia in Paris and stops in Colombia, the United States, and Serbia. Bluff was created as a condensed version of Maldonne. On stage, four women dance in dresses that soar, shimmer, burst with energy, bounce, drag across the floor, and collapse. As the dancers grapple with these dresses—which radiate dazzling light, exert control, or embody rebellion—the work explores the nature of femininity.

Leïla Ka

Ka has created choreography for Beyoncé, the César Awards ceremony, Zaho de Sagazan, and the Chilean National Ballet, among others. Drawing inspiration from both urban and contemporary dance, she established her own signature style in just a few years. After entering the world of street and urban dance, she passed an audition for Maguy Marin without having received formal dance training, and began her career as a dancer in Marin's masterpiece May B before moving on to her own choreography. Her first three works—solos and duets—achieved global success, with performances in over 20 countries. Her first ensemble piece, Maldonne, became a worldwide phenomenon within just a few months; it has toured globally for three years, including a sold-out performance at the Olympia in Paris and shows in locations ranging from Colombia and the United States to Serbia.

Presage

This series of works features underwater landscapes created through chemical activation within glass tanks, resembling small, sealed worlds cut off from our own. To craft these worlds—formed by minerals immersed in aqueous solutions—the artist skillfully employs a wide range of ingredients to achieve the desired colors and shapes. For this presentation, the Japanese artist atnr joins the project to collaborate in real-time on the music while the artwork is created live.

Hicham Berrada

Hicham Berrada

Born in Casablanca in 1986, he is now based in Paris and Roubaix, France. Incorporating a scientific approach, Berrada's work fuses intuition with knowledge, and science with poetry. He held a solo exhibition at the Mennour gallery in 2023, and in 2024, his solo exhibition Aléas (Chance) was presented at the Municipal Gallery of Sindelfingen, Germany. Berrada has also been nominated for the Marcel Duchamp Prize in 2020.

atnr

A Tokyo-based musician who performs sound pieces combining field recordings, electronic sounds, and instrumental tones in response to the performances of Hicham Berrada. By generating sound in real-time while reacting to shifting visuals and the atmosphere of the space, the artist explores the interplay between the visual and the auditory, as well as the evolving sense of time that emerges in each passing moment.

Clément Cogitore

Les Indes Galantes

Clément Cogitore adapted a scene from Les Indes galantes—an opéra-ballet composed by Jean-Philippe Rameau in 1735—featuring Krump dancers. Krump is a dance style that originated in the ghettos of Los Angeles in the 1990s. By combining the intense physicality of Krump with Baroque music, he offers a contemporary reinterpretation of Rameau's work.

Les Indes Galantes

Clément Cogitore

Morgestraich

In this work, Cogitore pays homage to the Basel Carnival, in which he participated during his childhood. At 4:00, as the city lights go down, musicians march through the crowds to the sound of fifes and drums. By detaching this procession—which marks the transition from winter to spring, from death to life—from its specific time and space, Cogitore re-examines an ancient ritual that binds a community together in uncertain times.

Elegies

Hundreds of small, glowing screens float above a sea of people; concertgoers are using their mobile phones to capture the scene unfolding beyond the confines of those screens. Like the subtitles of an absent song—or the inner voice of a disembodied narrator—passages from Rainer Maria Rilke's Duino Elegies are etched into this massive, collective wave of energy, evoking a digital ritual.

Clément Cogitore

Born in Colmar in 1983, and now based in Paris and Berlin. After studying at Le Fresnoy – Studio National des Arts Contemporains in France, Cogitore developed an artistic practice that lies at the intersection of contemporary art and cinema. Blending film, video, installation, and photography, he explores the forms of symbiosis between human beings and the images or representations they create. His work is driven by a distinctive perspective on ritual, collective memory, the embodiment of the sacred, and the permeability between different worlds. His works have been screened and exhibited at institutions such as the Palais de Tokyo, Museo Madre (Naples), Centre Pompidou (Paris), ICA (London), Haus der Kulturen der Welt (Berlin), MACRO (Rome), MoMA (New York), Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, Musée national des beaux-arts du Québec, SeMA Bunker (Seoul), Red Brick Art Museum (Beijing), and Kunsthau Baselland (Basel), as well as at international events including the Lyon Biennale, Berlin Biennale, and Yokohama Triennale.

Libido

Libido is a work composed of industrial warning lights that undergoes a remarkable transformation depending on the viewer's perspective. When viewed from directly in front or behind, the lights reveal the image of a pair of red lips, symbolizing physical allure. Moving to the side causes the lights to overlap and blend, shifting into the shape of a heart—an expression of emotional longing. Viewed from other angles, the form dissolves, transforming into a mysterious, energetic cloud of crimson stardust. Each individual light functions as an instinctive danger signal buried deep in our subconscious. Yet, does this sense of danger serve to hold us back? Or does it, paradoxically, ignite an even greater desire? Through these shifting visual forms, Libido poses a poignant question: whether driven by physical craving or emotional yearning, does confronting the deepest layers of our own perception inevitably entail an inherent sense of unease and risk?

Kim Songhe

Chandelier

Kim Songhe was born in Tokyo in 1982 as a third-generation Korean resident in Japan. Growing up between multiple cultural identities, she continually grappled with the feeling of “Where do I belong?” and “Do I truly belong anywhere at all?” This experience led her to project herself onto discarded stuffed animals and toys, which she began using as materials in her artwork. At first glance, her works may appear cute and playful; however, upon closer inspection, they reveal an undercurrent of anxiety and a sense of otherness. This texture reflects the experience of living within society while being unsettled by the gaze of others. For her, materials are not merely sculptural components, but vessels that embody stories and ethics through the very act of “picking up and reweaving”.

Ectoplastic Balet

Inspired by the Balet tree—long associated with mystery and folklore in the Philippines—this installation draws upon the unique ecology of a species known as the vampire or strangler fig. While the Balet is characterized by its habit of wrapping itself around existing trees as it grows, this work expresses that nature through the use of waste plastic coiled around living trunks and branches. The plastic entwined with the tree also serves as a symbol of the current reality in which plastic waste permeates the natural world and begins to encroach upon it. The installation creates a landscape that is both fantastical and unsettling. It presents a vivid contrast between aesthetic beauty and the disquieting reality of nature being slowly suffocated by human waste.

A Light for the After-Human Stage - A Presence Is Born Anew

On Halloween night, a single beam of light extends from the TV station to Mohri Garden. This building, which has continuously delivered the presence of unseen people, becomes a lighthouse tonight, directing its light toward the city. The lighting equipment used is the same that has illuminated the moments of many artists on music shows. However, tonight, no people are illuminated. The light touches a mechanical hand that harbors the memories of a puppeteer. The hand receives the light, divides it, sways it, and scatters it. Echoing this is the hustle and bustle of Roppongi, heard by an AI and belonging to no one. Even though no one is physically there, recorded and automated human traces are repeated. Yet, will a sense of presence emerge once again?

Flora - Au Fil des Villes

Flora - Au Fil des Villes is a fashion-art piece created to symbolize the friendship between Minato Ward and the 15th Arrondissement of Paris, established through their sister-city partnership. Drawing inspiration from Flora—the Roman goddess of flowers who governs the cycle of life and abundance—and the dogwood (hanamizuki), a symbol of Minato Ward, the work embodies themes of gratitude, the passing down of traditions, and cultural exchange. By printing dogwood patterns onto traditional Japanese cotton mosquito-netting fabric and fusing French draping, haute couture techniques, and French métiers d'art (fine craftsmanship) in floral ornamentation, the piece creates a figure of the goddess that embodies the cultures and memories of both Japan and France. The project incorporates floral artistry by a Japanese artist based in Paris and involves students from Minato City in the garment's creation; this fosters a space for learning and co-creation that transcends generations and national borders, aiming to visualize the bonds between people and the cultural exchange that will be carried into the future.

Fashion, Sound and Body Project* ROOT

Clothing invites sound, sound moves the body, and the body alters the expression of the clothing. The Fuku-Oto-Karada Project is a boundary-less performance where these three elements give direction to one another. Performing artist Yamada dances while repeatedly shedding layers of clothing, transforming into a succession of different creatures. From a giant frog in the forest—and a red body born of that frog—emerge a head with five ears, a torso covered in black warts, body hair made of pink circles, hips that fan out radially, a rear end with five tails, and patterned skin. Finally, the figure becomes human; roots sprout from the body, and it returns to the forest soil. Set to the music of Ryuichi Ono, this work invites reflection on the flow of life.

Window of Tomorrow

Window of Tomorrow is a spectacular work that uses the ever-changing sky as its stage. Created for Roppongi Art Night—returning as an all-night art festival after a three-year hiatus—, this work unfolds a narrative and an immersive experience throughout the night, set against the backdrop of the Roppongi Hills night sky and the Rose Garden. The performance Moon, taking place at the turn of the day, features AOITUKI, while the sunrise performance Sun features ATSUSHI. At other times, the site offers a unique spatial experience—a one-night-only installation that frames the night sky. Through the Window to Tomorrow, visitors glimpse the seamless transitions between yesterday, today, and tomorrow, as well as the fluid, gradational nature of our own sensibilities as they resonate with the changing natural world.

MAM Project 035: Brie Ruais

Based in Santa Fe, New Mexico, Brie Ruais creates sculptures that incorporate performative elements, focusing on the materiality of ceramics, the artist's own physicality, and the nature of hands-on labor. Her signature series includes works shaped through full-body movements - spreading, tearing, and scraping a mass of clay equal to her own body weight. For this exhibition, she presents new works developed after an artist-in-residence program at the Shigaraki Ceramic Cultural Park in Shiga Prefecture; these pieces reflect the results of her research into Japanese clay and ceramic history, integrated with her own artistic practice.

- * On Saturday, October 31, the museum will be open until 6:00 a.m. the following morning.

Mori Art Award 2026 Grand Prize Exhibition: Katayama Mari

The Mori Contemporary Art Foundation (MoriCAF) and the Mori Art Museum are jointly holding an exhibition showcasing the works of Katayama Mari, winner of the Mori Art Award's inaugural Grand Prize.

Through analogue photography and handicraft practices such as needlework and collage, Katayama has presented compelling possibilities for expanding the boundaries of her own body and its relationship with others. Her practice was highly praised by the Mori Art Award, and she is expected to achieve further success on the international art scene.

This exhibition will feature an installation that includes the "tree of life" series (2024-), Katayama's recent work that is now part of the collection at the Victoria & Albert Museum in London and served as a key reason for her selection.

* On Saturday, October 31, the museum will be open until 6:00 a.m. the following morning.

Human Landscape in MIDTOWN

Human Landscape in MIDTOWN consists of three lightbox sculptures based on the human form and a sign bearing the word MIDTOWN. The title derives from Human Landscape, a 2020 solo exhibition centered on the three sculptures. The artist, who has been creating works based on signage since 2000, conceived these human-figure lightbox sculptures by using fluorescent lights as a skeletal framework; the resulting forms evoked mountain ridges or landscapes from some other, distant place. What kind of landscape will emerge within Tokyo Midtown?

Walnut-Cracking Crow

Clever crows sometimes use humans to help them crack open walnuts. When you understand their intent and cooperate with them, it feels as though you have made a small, heartfelt connection with the bird. Humans and other living things coexist, interconnected within the Earth's cycle of life. If we can sense these connections in our daily lives, it feels as though each day becomes a little easier to live. The 36 colored dots represent the 36 elements that make up living organisms. These elements are constantly circulating, shaping the very bodies we inhabit.

Camouflage Prints

Camouflage is a sculptural work that incorporates the camouflage in nature, such as leaves or clouds. Although the sculpture stands right before the viewer, its surface is covered in a camouflage pattern that causes its contours to blend into the background, rendering the object elusive. By employing a camouflage design constructed from digital data and multiple forms, the work deliberately blurs the sculpture's outline, thereby destabilizing the boundary between reality and illusion. While the piece is a tangible, physical object, its appearance shifts depending on the viewer's position and the background, causing its very sense of presence to waver. Camouflage is fundamentally a technique used to assimilate an object into its surroundings; by adopting this quality, the work evokes a sensation of hovering between presence and absence, prompting viewers to question their own perceptions and the very act of seeing.

“Go Around” Roppongi Art Night 2026 ver.

“Isshu Mawaru” is a game in which she walks around carrying a case containing her sculptural work, Aibō (Companion), on her back. When she finds a place that catches her attention, she takes Aibō out and makes one full circle.

The rules are simple: start from a chosen point and return to that same point. That is all. Aibō has a single wheel, and she pushes it along using the handle attached to its back. As she changes its materials and form, the series continues to grow; this is the sixth iteration. With an Aibō that matches the glittering night of Roppongi, she shares a little spin of joy.

Is a Festival Possible in the City? Vol. 04: Making, Dressing, Dancing, Praying

What are we able to “make” for?

Festivals may be seen as one of the origins of culture in human history. In today’s society, where various forms of division continue to deepen, this project attempts to reconsider the nature of design by looking closely at the relationships that emerge from festivals: land, materials, living beings, stories and communities.

This co-creation workshop carries out the entire process, from gathering materials from the land and making masks and costumes, to creating a dance and presenting it at Roppongi Art Night.

GOOD DESIGN EXHIBITION 2026

This exhibition showcases all the winning entries of this year's Good Design Award, which marks its 70th anniversary. It presents an overwhelming array of visionary designs—including products, services, and projects—that are essential to contemporary life and society. The exhibition also features winners of the Long Life Design Award, honoring products, architecture, services, and content that have been cherished by users over the years. A GOOD DESIGN STORE TOKYO by NOHARA pop-up shop will be set up in the Atrium, offering the latest award-winning items as well as popular past winners for purchase. Additionally, this year features a special exhibition from the Hiroshima Good Design Award, now in its 32nd year.

GOOD DESIGN EXHIBITION 2026 is one of Japan's largest design events, offering an experience where you can see, touch, shop, learn, and enjoy.

Conceptual flag for an intersecting future

Nobori (vertical) banners—common in street advertising—originated as a means to distinguish friend from foe during battles and represent a traditional form of Japanese military flag. This work is a reproduction of an ink-and-watercolor painting inspired by the designs of Japanese military aircraft from the wartime era, rendered in the format of nobori banners. The sight of numerous banners rippling and waving in the wind symbolizes a multi-layered identity born from the intersection of diverse cultures and histories, rather than one defined by a single nation or ethnicity.

Shojo Manga Infinity: Moto Hagio, Ryoko Yamagishi, and Waki Yamato

To commemorate the 20th anniversary of the National Art Center, Tokyo's opening, a three-person exhibition will showcase the careers of three giants of shojo (girls') manga: Moto Hagio, Ryoko Yamagishi, and Waki Yamato.

Hagio, Yamagishi, and Yamato all debuted as manga artists in the late 1960s and went on to be central figures in the 1970s "golden age of shojo manga," when the genre greatly expanded its creative possibilities. They have continued to publish actively up to the present day, making them witnesses to a history era of artistic diversity and innovation.

This exhibition retraces their creative paths through original drawings from their best-known works and valuable archival materials, while also exploring their respective careers and sources of inspiration.

Masterpieces from the Itsuo Art Museum Collection: Buson, Go Shun, and the Art of Tea

The Itsuo Art Museum was founded in Ikeda city, Osaka, in 1957. "Itsuo" was the pen name of Kobayashi Ichizō (1873-1957), a giant among the entrepreneurs who built modern Japan: founder of the Hankyu Toho Group (today's Hankyu Hanshin Toho Group), which includes railroads and many other businesses. The museum's collection of 5,500 works reflects Itsuo's approach to art, his multifaceted accomplishments and enterprising personality, in a truly diverse collection that ranges from kohitsugire (old calligraphy fragments) and tea utensils to paintings by Yosa Buson and Go Shun. This long-awaited exhibition is an opportunity to view these carefully selected masterpieces together in one setting.

Learning from “Hōjōki”: Tiny Architecture Reweaves Life

The 13th-century essay “Hōjōki” is known in English as “The Ten-Foot Square Hut.” In it, Kamo no Chomei ponders the ephemeral nature of life in this impermanent world. The humble hut in which he wrote no longer exists, but his words are timeless. With architect Yoshiharu Tsukamoto serving as the exhibition director, this exhibition centers on the small dwelling that provides the title of the text and which Chomei calls Hōjō-no-iori – Ten-Foot Square Hut. His small hermitage is a starting point to reconsider contemporary life and the built environment.

I WAS MADE FOR LOVING YOU

As an imperfect cyborg—part human, part toy—Saeborg performs by wearing a self-made latex bodysuit that acts as an extension of her own skin. Centered on the relationship between humans and animals, this performance unfolds from the perspective of caring. A frail dog, walking unsteadily and shedding tears, stands as if abandoned on a street corner in Roppongi, exposed to the gazes of passersby. The work evokes in viewers a sense of having been born to love and explores the potential for caring and healing found in non-verbal, physical communication.

NEZO-Sleeping Positions

Try sleeping in Roppongi. The city's brightness does not fade when night falls; the flow of people, desires, exhaustion, and gazes all remain, never truly subsiding into silence. Night is not merely a time when darkness descends. It softens the contours that were distinct during the day, summons forth presences that had lain submerged in the city's depths, and causes the body to take on a different form.

NEZO-Sleeping Positions is an installation-performance that captures the subtle swaying that emerges between the city and the body, using two beds and two human forms. Rather than emphasizing the exhilaration or festive spirit of the night, this work turns its attention to the fatigue, tension, and unconscious shifting of a city unable to sleep. Bodies placed within the Roppongi night sway, drift, pause, and return.

This repetition quietly stirs the time and desires lingering in the city, manifesting like a form of calisthenics for a sleepless metropolis. It is precisely within the nocturnal light that these small oscillations reveal a different depth of the city. The work presents the gestures of a city that has missed its chance to sleep—gestures born in the space between the body seeking slumber and the city that cannot rest.

Wind, light, stone...

A new landscape emerges from the interplay of natural elements and physical expression. Artists living in harmony with the nature of the Seto Inland Sea region—guided by stillness and open space—engage in a shared breath with the natural world through their bodies. A Cyr wheel traces gentle circles, while a large flag sways and drifts with the breeze. An Aji stone, placed upon the stage, remains silent; yet, simply by existing there, it quietly evokes memories of mountains, the sea, and the passage of time in the hearts of the audience. Materials, space, the human body, and the audience—all connect seamlessly and gently to weave a single, unified landscape.

DANCE IS BREATHING

This work is an audiovisual performance exploring the themes of dance, breath, and the ever-changing body. Conceiving the body as a "vessel where memories and emotions temporarily reside," it delineates the boundaries between the transient and the enduring, grounded in the philosophy of constant flux.

The performance layers organic visuals—transforming like blooming and scattering flora or fluid matter—with fragments of cities recorded in Europe, fusing them with a soundscape that traverses ambient, IDM, and techno. By stirring the audience's perception and physical senses through repetitive beats and dance, it conjures an audiovisual ritual for the continuously breathing body, where personal memory and collective euphoria intersect.

■ What is the Open Call Project?

This project is a participatory program that showcases works by artists and creators selected through an open call, presenting them in public spaces and commercial facilities throughout the Roppongi area during the event. A diverse range of artistic expressions—including installations and performances—complement the main program, filling the entire neighborhood with art. The selected works are exhibited to visitors from Japan and abroad, providing an opportunity for emerging artists to share their creations with a wide audience. Since 2015, Roppongi Art Night has conducted the Open Call Project, an initiative to solicit and showcase artworks; over the eleven-year period leading up to 2025, a total of 101 works have been presented.

Scenes from last year

English Guided Tour: Of Light and Shadow, the Flâneur's Perspective

Join us for a special tour in English, exploring artworks and the streets of Roppongi together. Whether from far or near, anyone is welcome!

Taking inspiration from the perspective of the flâneur—a figure that emerged in 19th-century Paris who wandered the city without a particular destination, observing the streets and their surroundings—we will explore Roppongi through both its urban landscape and its artworks. This year, we will pay particular attention to light: the ways it illuminates the city and the artworks we encounter along the way. We will take time to interact deeply with the works, and with each other! As we walk through the city, we will approach Roppongi as one vast “open-air museum,” observing its history, terrain, architecture, and the interplay of light and shadow. By looking at the city from a different perspective, we may discover aspects of Roppongi that often go unnoticed in everyday life. Along the way, there may even be surprise encounters with actual artists behind the work. Don't miss this chance to visit Roppongi, its streets and its art, in new ways!

Roppongi Art Night 2026 Overview

Roppongi Art Night 2026 is a partner program of ARTE TOKYO (Tokyo International Festival of Arts and Culture), a new urban-based cultural and arts festival. ARTE TOKYO is a festival that brings together a diverse range of programs—including art, theater, music, illuminations, and entertainment—held across Tokyo from autumn through winter, showcasing the unique brilliance of each event to highlight the city's overall appeal. For its inaugural edition in 2026, the festival will feature numerous art and entertainment initiatives—including a revival of the Tokyo 2020 Games cultural program—in urban spaces such as parks and waterfronts. These activities will take place in coordination with various events, centering on three key areas: the Waterfront area, the Hibiya-Marunouchi area, and the Yoyogi-Shibuya area.
